Every A.A. group ought to be fully self-supporting, declining outside contributions.

"To conclude: Our spiritual way of life is safe for future generations if, as a Society, we resist the temptation to receive money from the outside world. But this leaves us with a responsibility – one that every member ought to understand. We cannot skimp when the treasurer of our group passes the hat. Our groups, our areas and AA as a whole will not function unless our services are sufficient and their bills are paid. When we meet and defeat the temptation to take large gifts, we are only being prudent. But when we are generous with the hat we give a token that we are grateful for our blessings and evidence that we are eager to share what we have found with all those who still suffer."

--Language of the Heart, Respecting Money. November 1957 Bill W

I have been in a lot of meetings lately and hearing the same thing when the secretary is giving their announcements. "The baskets will be past at such and such time; give what you can." No explanation of what the 7TH tradition is; what the contributions are used for.

What a disservice to our newcomers as well as individuals who are not familiar with our traditions to "ask for money" without explaining what it is used for. In Bill's comments he mentions that our financial obligations are the group's

How to Become an IGR

You can get involved by becoming an Intergroup Representative (IGR) for your meeting or group if they do not have one. An IGR should have at least one year of sobriety and be able to attend the monthly Intergroup meeting on the 4TH Monday of each month at 7:00 PM. You can also get involved by participating in one of the Intergroup committees.

If your meeting or group is not represented, you can take a group conscience to decide on representation, make a motion, and vote to have an IGR. You can then vote for a member to be your representative. The term is two years. A group may also elect an alternate IGR.

The Central Office can assist with questions and the process to help anyone interested in becoming involved in this service work. Central Offices are essentially AA service entities, "directly responsible to those they serve," as described in Tradition Nine. Local group representatives reflect the groups' conscience in the service center operations.

Legacies for August

Step 8 Made a list of all persons we had harmed, and became willing to make amends to them all.

Tradition 8 Alcoholics Anonymous should remain forever nonprofessional, but our service centers may employ special workers.

Concept 8 The trustees are the principal planners and administrators of overall policy and finance. They have custodial oversight of the separately incorporated and constantly active services, exercising this through their ability to elect all the directors of these entities.

responsibility and that every member should understand what these responsibilities are.

Are our local groups meeting their financial obligations? Does their group conscious vote on the amount of their prudent reserve and then send their excess to support the services of New York, their area, their district and their local intergroup or central office? Does the group even know if they are meeting their rent obligations or purchase literature for their meeting. You would be surprised at how many groups don't have any kind of literature available for the newcomer.

You would be amazed at how many people made comments about the service offices "needing money – have you seen how much they have in their accounts," without any knowledge of the service office's responsibilities.

As a long time member of Alcoholics Anonymous my responsibility goes beyond walking someone through their steps. It also includes sharing on the importance of the traditions and how AA functions as a whole.

I will close with this: "Remember a dollar doesn't go as far as it used too." A number of meetings have made it so easy for us to participate in the 7TH tradition by adding Zelle and Venmo to their accounting.

Prayers

By Douglas W., (webservant@aascv.org)

"Prayer and meditation are our principal means of conscious contact with God."

(Twelve Steps and Twelve Traditions, pg. 96)

If prayer feels awkward, confusing, or completely foreign to you right now, you're in good company. That's exactly where most of us started, myself included. Here's how it has worked for me.

I pray every morning for the people on my to-do list. Some days it's just checking a box. Other days it's more direct and meaningful. I wish I were more consistent and that my prayers went deeper. I don't always know how to make them more meaningful, but I keep practicing and trust God will help me get there.

When a friend is going through something hard, we pray together and wait for the results. I used to want God to answer in a very direct way. Time has taught me that my prayers for others are often most useful when God changes me instead. I become a better listener and more empathetic.

I have no power of my own, so I rely on God's power. God can change things, including me, and that's what prayer does.

A Quiet Practice That Changes the Day

Prayer can feel simple, complicated, awkward, powerful, or completely foreign, depending on where we are in recovery. When I pray with someone, do I close with "Amen," or something less formal like "Thank you, God"? I used to overthink it. Over time I've learned to just be authentic. If someone is open to me praying with them, I show up as myself.

Some of us came to Alcoholics Anonymous with a strong faith already in place. That was me, but my confidence was low. God was not answering my prayers, so I ended up in AA. I later realized God required action from me. I had been treating God like some kind of genie. Others came in angry at God, suspicious of anything that felt like religion (which they rejected), or convinced that prayer, at best, was for other people. And some were just too worn down to care what anything was called. All of us knew we could not keep drinking, and we could not seem to live sober on our own power.

That is where A.A. prayer begins for many of us. Not in polished words. Not in perfect belief. Not even in comfort. It often begins with need. We land in enough pain that we become willing to change.

The Big Book says, "Lack of power, that was our dilemma" (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 45). That sentence gives prayer its proper context. Prayer in A.A. is not decoration. It is not performance. It is not a way to sound spiritual in a meeting. It is one of the ways we reach toward the Power we lacked when our own resources failed us.

And if you are new, uncertain, or still resistant, that is all right. A.A. does not ask us to begin with a perfect understanding of God. In fact, the Big Book says, "Much to our relief, we discovered we did not need to consider another's conception of God" (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 46). That single idea has opened the door for countless alcoholics. We are invited to begin with "God as we understood Him," not God as someone else demands we understand Him.

That matters, because prayer is not about winning a theological argument. It is about improving conscious contact, asking for help, and learning to live differently.

Prayer Begins With Willingness

In Step Three, we make "a decision to turn our will and our lives over to the care of God as we understood Him." The Twelve and Twelve describes this as the opening of a door. "There is only one key, and it is called willingness" (Twelve Steps and Twelve Traditions, pg. 34).

That is encouraging, because willingness is available even when certainty is not. I do not have to understand everything about God before I can pray. I do not have to feel deeply spiritual before I can ask for help. I do not even have to like the idea at first. I only need enough willingness to try.

The Big Book gives a similarly practical starting point: "Do I now believe, or am I even willing to believe, that there is a Power greater than myself?" (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 47). That question is gentle but direct. It does not demand that we leap from unbelief to perfect faith. It asks if we are willing to begin. For me, that was the starting point.

For many of us, that beginning is a short prayer said with gritted teeth: "Help me." Or, "Please keep me sober today." Or, "I don't know if You're there, but I'm willing." That may not sound grand, but it is honest. And honest prayer is a good place to start.

Prayer is Connected to Action

One mistake I can make is treating prayer as a substitute for action. A.A. does not teach that. The Big Book is clear: "Now we need more action, without which we find that 'Faith without works is dead'" (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 76).

Prayer is woven into action. We pray for willingness, then we take the Step. We ask for direction, then we make the amends. We ask for freedom from resentment, then we discuss it honestly and look for our part. We ask to be useful, then we go help someone.

My first sponsor used to tell me that if I'm in a closet praying and I'm hungry, God isn't going to slide hot dogs under the door. Getting up and making my own hot dog is my job.

This is one of the great safeguards in A.A. prayer. It keeps prayer from becoming an escape. I do not pray so I can avoid reality. I pray so I can meet reality with more honesty, courage, humility, and usefulness. The Seventh Step Prayer captures this well, more on that shortly.

Third Step Prayer

The Third Step Prayer sits in the Big Book right after the discussion of self-will, self-centeredness, and the decision to stop "playing God." The Big Book says, "Selfishness—self-centeredness! That, we think, is the root of our troubles," and then explains that many of us had to quit trying to run the whole show ourselves.

The Third Step Prayer is not just a formal prayer we say once. It is a surrender prayer. It comes after the Big Book describes the problem of self-will, the idea that I can arrange life, people, outcomes, and even God to suit myself. That never worked for me. The Big Book says, "First of all, we had to quit playing God. It didn't work" (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 62). That line gives the Third Step Prayer its power.

When I work with men, I tell them this isn't just a prayer. It's a contract with God. If they choose to drink again, the suffering that follows is a direct result of breaking that contract.

When I say, "God, I offer myself to Thee," I am not asking God to bless my old plans. I am offering God my life, my thinking, my motives, and my usefulness. The prayer continues, "Relieve me of the bondage of self, that I may better do Thy will" (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 63). For me, that is the heart of it. I am not just asking to feel better. I am asking to be freed from the self-centeredness that keeps me blocked from God, other people, and the life A.A. is trying to teach me.

Here is the Third Step Prayer in full, from the Big Book:

"God, I offer myself to Thee—to build with me and to do with me as Thou wilt. Relieve me of the bondage of self, that I may better do Thy will. Take away my difficulties, that victory over them may bear witness to those I would help of Thy Power, Thy Love, and Thy Way of life. May I do Thy will always!" (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 63)

Seventh Step Prayer

The Third Step Prayer opens the door, but I still have to walk through it. In the Big Book, the next sentence after the prayer says we "launched out on a course of vigorous action." That action is Steps Four, Five, and Six: writing inventory, admitting the truth, and becoming willing. Only when we reach Step Seven does the Seventh Step Prayer make sense. I cannot honestly ask God to remove defects I have not yet named, admitted, and become willing to release.

The Seventh Step Prayer is not just asking God to "fix me." It's asking to partner with God in removing my shortcomings. First I have to admit to God that I have shortcomings. That admission is what opens the door for God to change me. One problem I have is wanting to hold onto my shortcomings, not because they serve me well, but because they're familiar and comfortable. I lack faith that God wants something better for me, and I resist.

Spiritual change comes after I have done the work of Step Four, admitted the truth in Step Five, and become willing in Step Six. So Step Seven is where prayer becomes humble cooperation with God.

"My Creator, I am now willing that You should have all of me, good and bad. I pray that You now remove from me every single defect of character which stands in the way of my usefulness to You and my fellows. Grant me strength, as I go out from here, to do Your bidding." (Alcoholics Anonymous, pg. 76)

Other Prayers

Besides the Third Step Prayer and Seventh Step Prayer, the Big Book contains a whole practical prayer pattern:

- Pray for protection and care
- Pray for freedom from resentment
- Pray for fear to be removed
- Pray for guidance
- Pray for willingness
- Pray before amends
- Pray for patience, tolerance, kindness, and love
- Pray during daily review
- Pray when agitated or doubtful

If you know me, I like to count things. I have a count from each chapter of the Big Book where prayers are mentioned. This is my list. Yours may be more or less, but whether your count matches mine is less important than knowing we're paying attention to the prayers when we read them. In my Big Book, each of these mentions is highlighted in orange, and I draw a box around every name Bill W. used for God. This practice reminds me to slow down and pay attention to those sentences. Here is my count:

- Chapter 1—Bill's Story: 1
- Chapter 5—How It Works: 9
- Chapter 6—Into Action: 16
- Chapter 11—A Vision for You: 1

Prayers in the Stories

I did not forget about the 42 stories after Chapter 11. I encourage you to read them and find the prayers yourself. It might be a helpful exercise. One story is especially worth mentioning. "Freedom From Bondage" appears in the Second, Third, and Fourth Editions of the Big Book. We will see whether it is included in the upcoming Fifth Edition. The story is attributed to Wynn Laws.

"In my prayers that morning I asked God to point out to me some way to be free of this resentment." (Freedom From Bondage, pg. 551) Then she finds the practical prayer direction: "If you have a resentment you want to be free of, if you will pray for the person or the thing that you resent, you will be free. If you will ask in prayer for everything you want for yourself to be given to them, you will be free. Ask for their health, their prosperity, their happiness, and you will be free. Even when you don't really want it for them and your prayers are only words and you don't mean it, go ahead and do it anyway. Do it every day for two weeks, and you will find you have come to mean it and to want it for them, and you will realize that where you used to feel bitterness and resentment and hatred, you now feel compassionate understanding and love." (Freedom From Bondage, pg. 552)

One Last Thought

The Big Book is spiritual in nature, and prayer runs through it. There's an old saying that fits here: "When the student is ready, the teacher will appear." The Big Book is a guidepost pointing us toward the Teacher. All we have to do is keep active, keep praying, and stay willing.

Change for Change

You've seen those small change dishes at coffee counters—pennies and quarters that don't seem like much on their own, but together make a real difference. The same is true for supporting our Santa Clarita Valley Central Office.

Central Office is where newcomers find their first meeting, where literature and chips are available, and where the phone is answered day and night by someone who understands. These services rely on rent, utilities, phone lines, and supplies—costs that add up.

We're inviting you to help in a simple way: contribute your spare change. Keep a small bowl or jar at home or in your meeting labeled "For Central Office." When it fills, drop it off. Small, steady gifts keep our local AA heartbeat strong.

Every call answered, every Big Book sold, every meeting list printed is powered by generosity—one coin at a time. Your change truly helps change lives.

You can also contribute through our "Faithful Friends program at AASCV.org with either a one-time or monthly contribution.

Five Things to Know About Sobriety

By Kimberly Cooper

kimberlycooperstudio@gmail.com

Five Things to Know About Sobriety That Have Nothing to Do with Being Loved or Accepted by Others—and Everything to Do with Being Here for Yourself

We often talk about sobriety as though its greatest reward is relational: people will trust you again, your family will forgive you, your partner will feel safer, your friends will welcome you back. You will become easier to love. Those things may happen. Some of them may not. But sobriety cannot depend upon other people responding to your transformation correctly. If it does, your life is still being held hostage by forces outside of you. You are still waiting for someone else to decide whether you deserve peace. The deepest work of sobriety is not becoming more acceptable to other people. It is becoming present and trustworthy to yourself. It is the slow, sometimes exquisitely uncomfortable practice of saying: Whatever happens next, I will not leave myself.

Here are five things to know about that kind of sobriety.

1. Sobriety Is Not Self-Improvement. It Is Self-Return.

Addiction often begins as a way to leave. We leave the body when it carries too much pain. We leave the present when it feels unbearable. We leave loneliness, shame, boredom, anger, grief and memories we do not yet know how to hold. For a little while, alcohol or another substance provides an exit door. Eventually, however, the exit becomes a trap.

Sobriety is not about constructing a shiny, improved version of yourself who wakes before sunrise, drinks green juice and never has an uncharitable thought. It is about returning to the self who was there all along—the one beneath the coping mechanisms, performances and anesthetics.

That return can feel less like a triumphant homecoming and more like entering a long-abandoned house. The electricity may be off. There may be broken glass on the floor. Some rooms may frighten you. But it is still your house. And now, perhaps for the first time, you are willing to stay inside it long enough to turn on the lights.

2. You Do Not Have to Earn the Right to Care for Yourself.

Many of us learned that care had to be earned. We could rest after we had been productive enough. We could feel proud after someone praised us. We could forgive ourselves once everyone else had forgiven us. We could tend to our pain only after proving that someone else had caused it. Sobriety asks us to stop negotiating with our own humanity. You do not have to be admired before you feed yourself well. You do not have to be understood before you go to bed at a reasonable hour. You do not need unanimous approval before protecting your nervous system, declining an invitation or leaving a room that does not feel safe. Caring for yourself is not a prize awarded for good behavior. It is part of the responsibility of being alive.

At first, these choices can feel almost insultingly small: drinking water, eating something nourishing, answering the phone, taking medication, attending a meeting, going for a walk, telling the truth, getting beneath clean sheets before the despair arrives. But self-trust is not built through grand declarations. It is built through ordinary acts of care repeated until your body begins to believe: She is coming back for me.

3. Your Feelings Are Real Even When Nobody Else Validates Them.

When we have spent years looking outside ourselves for evidence of our worth, we may also look outside ourselves for permission to feel. Was it really that bad? Am I being too sensitive? Do I have the right to be angry? What if they remember it differently? What if nobody understands why this hurts? In sobriety, feelings arrive without their usual sedation. They may come loudly and all at once, like impatient creditors who have finally found your address. Not every feeling is a fact, but every feeling is information. You do not have to obey each emotion, dramatize it or build a permanent identity around it. You do have to become willing to hear it. Anger may be telling you that a boundary was crossed. Grief may be telling you that something mattered. Envy may be revealing an un-lived desire. Fear may be protecting an old wound long after the danger has passed. Your inner life does not require a jury.

Being here for yourself means becoming the person who can say, I believe that this is what I am experiencing. I will listen before I judge. I will not make myself disappear simply because my feelings make someone else uncomfortable.

4. You Will Have to Learn How to Stay Through the Ordinary Moments.

We expect sobriety to test us during catastrophe. Often, it tests us on a perfectly unremarkable Tuesday afternoon. The work is not only surviving heartbreak, conflict or crisis. It is staying present through boredom. Restlessness. Laundry. An unanswered text. A lonely evening. A project that takes longer than expected. A body that changes slowly. A life that does not provide fireworks on command.

Addiction trains the brain to expect interruption, intensity and immediate relief. Sobriety returns us to the natural pace of a human life—and human life contains an enormous number of minutes in which nothing spectacular happens. Those minutes are not empty. They are where a life is actually built.

Being here for yourself means resisting the urge to turn every discomfort into an emergency. It means allowing an ordinary moment to remain ordinary. You make tea. You wash the plate. You sit beneath the sky. You let the craving rise, crest and pass without converting it into a command. Gradually, what once felt like emptiness begins to reveal itself as spaciousness. You are not waiting for life to begin. This is life, quietly happening, and you are finally here for it.

5. Being Here for Yourself Means You Stop Abandoning Yourself When You Are Imperfect.

Many people can love themselves when they are doing well. The greater test comes when they disappoint themselves. Old shame says that one mistake proves you are a mistake. One bad decision becomes a reason to disappear. One painful day becomes evidence that nothing has changed. But sobriety is not a spotless performance. It is a relationship—and healthy relationships require repair.

There may be days when you are resentful, chaotic, selfish, frightened or exhausted. There may be moments when you return to an old behavior, even if you do not return to the substance. You may lie, isolate, lash out, overeat, overspend or reach desperately for someone else to regulate what is happening inside you. The question is not whether you will always behave perfectly. The question is: When you recognize that you are suffering, will you punish yourself—or will you come closer?

Being here for yourself means taking responsibility without turning responsibility into cruelty. It means making amends without reducing yourself to your worst act. It means asking what happened, what you needed, what you can learn and what loving action is possible now. You do not heal self-abandonment by abandoning yourself more efficiently. You heal it by staying.

Community matters. Meetings matter. Friendship, fellowship, accountability and love matter enormously. We are not meant to recover in isolation. But other people cannot perform the most intimate act of sobriety for us. They cannot inhabit our bodies. They cannot sit inside our private minutes. They cannot make the thousand small decisions through which we either disappear from ourselves or return. Sobriety is not a campaign to persuade the world that you are worthy of love. It is the practice of no longer requiring the world's permission to treat yourself as though you are. And perhaps that is the quiet miracle at the center of recovery: after spending years searching for someone who would see you, save you, choose you or refuse to leave you, you discover that you can become that person.

You can be the one who stays.
