The Newcomer We Haven't Met Yet

By Jason D.
dcm@area93district7.org

It can be easy to lose sight of why we do the work of General Service.

District meetings, committee reports, budgets, elections, workshop planning, and discussions about procedures may not seem exciting. At times, they can even feel disconnected from carrying the message. Yet every decision we make in service should lead us back to one simple question:

How does this help the alcoholic who still suffers?

Most of the people we serve are not sitting in our district meetings. They aren't voting during our group consciences or attending committee meetings. In fact, many of them haven't even walked through the doors of Alcoholics Anonymous yet.

They are the newcomer we haven't met.

The choices we make today help determine the experience that newcomer will have tomorrow. Will there be coffee ready before the meeting? Will someone be there to greet them? Will the meeting have current literature? Will the phone be answered when they reach out for help? Will there be a healthy home group waiting to welcome them?

How to Become an IGR

You can get involved by becoming an Intergroup Representative (IGR) for your meeting or group if they do not have one. An IGR should have at least one year of sobriety and be able to attend the monthly Intergroup meeting on the 4TH Monday of each month at 7:00 PM. You can also get involved by participating in one of the Intergroup committees.

If your meeting or group is not represented, you can take a group conscience to decide on representation, make a motion, and vote to have an IGR. You can then vote for a member to be your representative. The term is two years. A group may also elect an alternate IGR.

The Central Office can assist with questions and the process to help anyone interested in becoming involved in this service work. Central Offices are essentially AA service entities, "directly responsible to those they serve," as described in Tradition Nine. Local group representatives reflect the groups' conscience in the service center operations.

Good service leadership at all levels is indispensable for our future functioning and safety. Primary world service leadership, once exercised by the founders, must necessarily be assumed by the trustees.

The Newcomer

These things don't happen by accident. They happen because trusted servants quietly give their time and attention to the work that keeps our Fellowship strong.

General Service can sometimes seem removed from the meeting room, but it exists for the same reason every AA group exists—to support our primary purpose of carrying the message to the alcoholic who still suffers. Whether we're discussing finances, planning a workshop, electing trusted servants, or sharing information between our groups and Area, our work helps ensure that AA remains available for the next person who needs it.

I've found that asking one simple question can bring clarity to almost any discussion:

How does this help the newcomer we haven't met yet?

When we keep that person in mind, personalities become less important. Differences of opinion become easier to navigate. Decisions become less about what any one of us wants and more about what will best serve Alcoholics Anonymous as a whole.

None of us knows who that next newcomer will be. It could be someone walking into a meeting for the first time tonight, someone calling our hotline next month, or someone who won't need AA for years to come. But when that day arrives, I hope they find what so many of us found: a welcoming Fellowship, a message of hope, and people who cared enough to prepare the way before they ever arrived.

Thank you to everyone in District 7 who continues to give your time, experience, and willingness in service. Every group conscience, every committee meeting, every report, and every act of service helps ensure that the doors of Alcoholics Anonymous remain open for the newcomer we haven't met yet.

In love and service,

Jason D. Decker

Understanding Anonymity

By Douglas W.,
(webservant@aascv.org)

This article draws from A.A. Conference-approved literature and A.A. service resources, including Understanding Anonymity (P-47), A.A. Guidelines on Internet (MG-18), and A.A.'s public page "A.A. and Anonymity."

P-47 has been renamed, "Anonymity — Our Spiritual Foundation".

The Quiet Strength That Protects A.A.

When I first came around Alcoholics Anonymous, I did not understand anonymity or able to pronounce it, I avoided if I could to not read the Traditions. I thought it simply meant, "Don't tell on people who you saw at a meeting." And yes, that is part of it. But over time, I began to see that anonymity is much deeper than privacy. It is one of the spiritual safeguards that keeps A.A. from becoming about fame, personalities, opinion, power, or public approval.

Anonymity protects the newcomer and protects the member who is still unsure, still frightened, still carrying shame. It is so broad that it protects the Fellowship from being attached to one person's reputation. And, maybe most importantly, it reminds me that my recovery is not a performance. It is not something I use to make myself look important. It is something I live, one day at a time, with growing humility.

A.A.'s service resource on anonymity says that two of the Traditions directly address this principle. Tradition Eleven says, "Our public relations policy is based on attraction rather than promotion; we need always maintain personal anonymity at the level of press, radio and films." Tradition Twelve says, "Anonymity is the spiritual foundation of all our Traditions, ever reminding us to place principles before personalities."

Those two sentences say a lot. We carry the message, but we do not advertise ourselves as the message. We share recovery, but we do not sell A.A. through personalities. We let the program speak through changed lives.

Anonymity Protects the Newcomer

One of the clearest explanations I found is in the Conference Approved pamphlet, Understanding Anonymity (P-47). It says that anonymity serves "two different yet equally vital functions." First, "At the personal level, anonymity provides protection for all members from identification as alcoholics, a safeguard often of special importance to newcomers." (P-47, p. 5). Second, "At the public level of press, radio, TV, film/video other public forms of the Internet and social media platforms, anonymity stresses the equality in the Fellowship of all members by putting the brake on those who might otherwise exploit their A.A. affiliation to achieve recognition, power, or personal gain." (P-47, p. 5).

It is important to note that P-47 is Conference Approved Literature, like our Big Book. It was the first piece of literature to include "forms of the Internet and social media platforms." Even in the Foreword to the Second Edition in 1955 (we see this spiritual principle developing through added examples), "It was decided that all members ought to be anonymous at the level of press, radio, TV and films..." (Alcoholics Anonymous, XIX). Tradition Eleven has never changed. The supporting literature uses new examples as technology advances, but the spiritual principle does not change. I have heard people imply the Big Book does not mention the Internet, so they are free to use it any way they want — oh really?

Many of us arrived in A.A. carrying fear, guilt, embarrassment, and confusion. Some of us were afraid of what our families would think. Some were afraid of work consequences. Some were afraid of being judged. Some could barely say the word alcoholic out loud.

On P-47, p. 6 it puts it plainly: "Without it, many would never attend their first meeting." It also says, "Anonymity is essential for this atmosphere of trust and openness."

That has been true in my experience. A meeting room needs to feel safe before people can become honest. A newcomer may not understand the Steps yet. They may not know what a sponsor is. They may not yet believe recovery is possible. But if they hear, "Who you see here, what you hear here, let it stay here," something softens. The door opens just a little.

Anonymity does not mean secrecy in a shameful way. It means safety. It gives each person the dignity of deciding when, how, and with whom to share their own story.

"Such a disclosure, however, is always their own choice." (P-47, p. 6). That line is important. My story is mine to share. Your story is yours to share. No one else gets to decide that for us.

Anonymity Is Also Humility

At the public level, anonymity becomes something more than personal privacy. It becomes humility in action.

Let's be honest. Alcoholics are not always strangers to ego. Many of us know what it is like to want attention, approval, control, or importance. Recovery gives us a new way to live, but the old defects still show up. Anonymity helps keep those instincts in check.

Bill W. described anonymity as “the spiritual base, the sure key to all the rest of our Traditions.” (P-47, p. 7). He connected it with “prudence” and “self-effacement,” and called it “the cornerstone of our security as a movement.”

That word self-effacement may sound old-fashioned, but the idea is simple: I do not have to put myself forward all the time. I do not have to make myself the center. I do not have to turn service into status.

Anonymity teaches me to ask: Am I carrying the message, or am I trying to be admired for carrying it?

That question can sting a little. But it is useful.

Attraction Rather Than Promotion

Tradition Eleven gives A.A. a public relations policy that is both practical and spiritual: attraction rather than promotion.

Promotion says, “Look at me.”

Attraction says, “This helped me, and it may help you too.”

Promotion depends on image. Attraction depends on experience.

A.A. does not need famous celebrities to prove it works. It does not need polished advertising campaigns built around personalities. The best evidence for A.A. is still one alcoholic talking honestly to another alcoholic. A sober life, lived with some usefulness and humility, carries its own quiet weight.

Understanding Anonymity (P-47), explains that early A.A. members learned this through experience. At first, some believed well-known members could help the Fellowship by publicly identifying themselves. But experience showed the risk. “If one anonymity breaker stepped forward, others would follow; and if members were to strive for public acclaim and power, the spiritual unity so essential to the work of helping fellow alcoholics would soon be lost.” (P-47, p. 9).

That is the lesson. The issue is not whether one person means well. The issue is what happens to A.A. when personalities become the focus. Public recognition can shift attention away from the spiritual principles that saved us.

And A.A. needs those principles more than it needs any individual spokesperson.

Anonymity Online

The internet has made anonymity more complicated. Years ago, anonymity at the public level mainly meant newspapers, radio, films, and television. Today, most of us carry a publishing device in our pocket.

A.A.’s public page (A.A. and Anonymity) warns that when using social media and online platforms, “A.A. members are responsible for their own anonymity and that of others.” It also says, “When we break our anonymity in online forums, we may inadvertently break the anonymity of others.”

Back to P-47, p. 11 says something similar: “When we text or post something online, we should assume that we are publishing at the public level.”

That is a helpful rule. If I post a photo from an A.A. event, such as our SCV Convention, tag people, mention names, or show faces, I may be revealing more than I realize. Even if I am comfortable with my own anonymity, I may be breaking someone else’s. Even a small detail can identify another member.

The A.A. Guidelines on Internet (MG-18) are also listed as a resource for online anonymity, and P-47 points members to the A.A. Guideline on the Internet for more information. The principle is consistent, regardless of the medium: digital spaces require care, especially when they are public or easily shared.

P-47, p. 10, suggests that publicly accessible websites and social media require the same safeguards used for press, radio, and film/video. It says, “Unless password-protected, a website requires the same safeguards that we use at the level of press, radio, and film/video.” It also suggests that when A.A.’s gather as A.A.’s or as an A.A. group on social media, “these pages are set to ‘private’ rather than ‘public.’” (P-47, p. 10).

That is practical guidance. Before posting, I can pause and ask:

- Am I identifying myself publicly as an A.A. member?
- Am I identifying someone else?
- Is this page public, searchable, or shareable?
- Am I carrying the message, or drawing attention to myself?
- Would this make a newcomer feel safer, or more exposed?

Those questions slow me down. That is usually a good thing.

Anonymity Is Not a Cover for Harm

It is also important to say what anonymity is not.

Anonymity is not a shield for unsafe, inappropriate, or criminal behavior. It is clear that anonymity "is not intended to be a cloak protecting inappropriate or criminal behavior." (P-47, p. 10). It adds that saying something about inappropriate behavior or calling proper authorities "does not go against any A.A. Traditions and is meant to preserve the safety of all members." (P-47, p. 10).

That matters. Sometimes people misunderstand anonymity as silence at any cost. But A.A. is not helped by ignoring harm. The principle is meant to protect recovery, not protect misconduct.

So, yes, I try to respect anonymity. I do not gossip. I do not identify members. I do not repeat personal disclosures from meetings. But if there is a safety issue, anonymity does not require me to look away.

Practicing Anonymity in Daily Life

For me, anonymity has become a daily practice. It is not only about what I say publicly. It is about how I think.

When I am in a meeting, anonymity asks me to listen without ranking people. Newcomer, old-timer, trusted servant, visitor, speaker, sponsor, sponsee: we meet at the same level, that is as an alcoholic helping one another.

When I am in service, anonymity reminds me that the role is not mine to own. I may be trusted with a job for a season, but I am not the job. I am there to serve the group, district, area not to think I have become important.

When I speak about recovery outside A.A., anonymity helps me be careful. I can say "I am sober" or "I am in recovery", I do not share that I am A.A. unless I thought it though, usually if I can help and not self-serve. I can share my experience when appropriate. But if I identify myself publicly as an A.A. member, especially with my full name or face, I may be stepping outside the Traditions. Some times someone looks familiar and I cannot remember where I met them, I do not say "did I meet you at an A.A. meeting?" I use a less direct approach, "Are you a friend of Bill W's" only A.A. members know what that means. Likewise, at a party or gathering and someone asks, how do you two know each other (you and me are in A.A.), I tell them we have mutual friends.

This week, I was in a AI tech meeting that had nothing to do with A.A. It was being recorded, I was asking a few questions during the recording, then the recording stopped and they ask again if I had questions, I opened up about being in recovery and some tech challenges, there were four of us and another member identified, now their are two members and two normies, the focus on tech around solving our unique requirements, shifted and I learned a lot more on this technical subject when I explained that we cannot use the same tools (promotion) everyone else has the freedom to use.

A.A.'s public page says members may disclose their identity and speak as recovered alcoholics in interviews "so long as their A.A. membership is not revealed." It also says members may speak publicly as A.A. members only "if their full names or faces are not revealed." They speak as individual members, not for A.A. as a whole.

That distinction helps me. I can carry hope without making myself a public representative of A.A.

I am a citizen of the world, and as such, I am free to have opinions or discussions that serve my interests, but not my A.A. affiliation where ever I want.

I've seen anonymity go a bit far at meetings where one alcoholic talking to another and reluctant to give their last name. That is their choice, but it isn't always helpful. If you were hospitalized, they won't let me visit "Jane D."; they need a last name.

Principles Before Personalities

Tradition Twelve gives us the heart of the matter: "Anonymity is the spiritual foundation of all our Traditions, ever reminding us to place principles before personalities."

I need that reminder. I can get impressed by personalities. I can get irritated by personalities. I can make things about who said it instead of whether it is true. I can forget that the power of A.A. is not in any one person. It is in the shared experience, the Steps, the Traditions, the informed group conscience, and the grace that seems to move when one alcoholic helps another.

Anonymity brings me back gently. It tells me: keep the focus on the message. Respect the person beside you. Protect the newcomer. Be careful online. Serve without needing applause. Share my experience, but don't turn A.A. into a platform.

So where does this leave us? For me, anonymity isn't a restriction; it's a freedom. It frees me from needing to feel important. It frees A.A. from being represented by any one personality. It frees the newcomer to walk through the door without fear. And it frees all of us to meet on equal ground, one alcoholic helping another.

That is quiet strength. And A.A. has depended on it from the beginning.

Don't Leave Before the Miracle Happens

By Kimberly Cooper

kimberlycooperstudio@gmail.com

When I first came into Alcoholics Anonymous, I knew I needed to stop drinking. What I didn't know was how strange it might feel to become sober. For the first month, I felt off. Not drunk. Not hungover. Not exactly sick. Just off, as if my body, brain, and spirit had all awakened in a strange room and were trying to remember where the furniture was. A man in an early AA meeting once said, "When you all come in here, you are dim bulbs. But eventually, if you stay, I see the lights coming on." I loved that because it was true. I was a dim bulb. My brain was foggy. My feelings were everywhere. My body was doing mysterious things. I could not always follow what people were saying in meetings, especially when they started speaking fluent AA: surrender, defects of character, the Promises, ninety meetings in ninety days, Higher Power.

But slowly, the light began to come on.

If you are new and confused, please understand you are not necessarily doing sobriety wrong. You may simply be healing.

What to Expect Emotionally: The Walking Cactus and the Walking Waterfall

In early sobriety, I felt like a walking cactus. Without alcohol, I was no longer self-medicating normal human emotions. Every irritation, disappointment, awkward conversation, old memory, and minor inconvenience touched a nerve. I felt prickly and exposed. I had spent years pouring alcohol over my emotions, and suddenly there was nothing between me and my own skin. That rawness did not mean sobriety wasn't working. It meant the anesthesia had worn off.

Then I became a walking waterfall. I cried constantly. Sometimes I knew why; sometimes I didn't. I cried from relief, grief, shame, guilt, remorse, exhaustion, gratitude, and the shock of finally being present for my own life. Feelings I had postponed were standing in line, waiting to be admitted. Alcohol had not eliminated those feelings. It had put them in storage, and apparently the storage bill had come due.

That is why I immediately found a sponsor. I needed someone who had lived through early sobriety and could help me process what was surfacing without drowning in it. My sponsor did not gasp at my shame or run from my remorse. She knew the territory. If you are newly sober, do not try to privately out think the disease that has been privately out thinking you. Get phone numbers. Find a sponsor. Arrive early. Stay late. Let people know you. The fellowship is not decorative. It is part of the medicine.

What to Expect Physically: Your Body Is Recalibrating

My physical body went through its own strange renovation. My digestion changed. My skin broke out. I was tired, foggy, and uncomfortable. I began sleeping through the night instead of passing out and waking up anxious. I also became aware of physical issues I had ignored or covered up with alcohol, including menopause.

Sobriety did not cause everything I was feeling. Sobriety made it possible for me to finally notice what had already been happening. For years, alcohol had interfered with my ability to hear my body clearly. Once I stopped drinking, the volume came back on. Hunger, fatigue, pain, hormones, thirst, anxiety, and the need for actual rest all began identifying themselves. Your experience may be completely different. Bodies are personal, and healing does not follow a cute little calendar. But brain fog, sleep disruption, fatigue, irritability, and feeling generally unwell can occur as the brain and body adjust.

One important note: alcohol withdrawal can be dangerous and, in some cases, life-threatening. Shaking, severe vomiting, hallucinations, seizures, confusion, or rapidly worsening symptoms require medical attention—not just another meeting. The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism recommends medical support for people at risk of serious withdrawal. AA is powerful fellowship, but it is not a substitute for a doctor.

Be gentle with your body. Feed it. Hydrate it. Rest it. Have it examined. You have moved back into your body after a long absence. It may need some attention.

What to Expect Spiritually: The Pink Cloud and the Quiet Miracle

Alongside all this discomfort, I was also on what AA calls a pink cloud. The secret was finally out. I had told the truth. I was no longer spending my days hiding, managing, minimizing, bargaining, or pretending. I was relieved to be on a road to recovery and honest with the people around me. That relief felt almost euphoric. The pink cloud is real and beautiful. Enjoy it but don't confuse it with permanent weather. It may fade. Ordinary life will return. Someone will hurt your feelings. The car will need repairs. You will wake up cranky. You may wonder why you don't feel spiritually radiant anymore. That does not mean the miracle has left. It means the miracle is becoming practical.

In the Big Book, we read: "When we drew near to Him, He disclosed Himself to us!" The book uses Him; you may use God, Spirit, the Universe, Love, the group, or a Higher Power you do not yet understand. The point, for me, is willingness. I do not have to figure out God before asking for help. I surrender, make a little room, and allow faith to reveal itself through experience.

When newcomers read the Promises, they can sound almost impossible: serenity, freedom, usefulness, losing fear. Then someone says, "Don't leave before the miracle happens." The miracle is not always lightning, angels, or a sudden personality transplant. Sometimes it is realizing you have gone an entire afternoon without wanting a drink. Sometimes it is sleeping through the night. Telling the truth. Answering the phone. Feeling grief without fleeing from it. Laughing from your belly. Looking into your own eyes without turning away. The miracle is the dim bulb beginning to glow.

Early sobriety may be uncomfortable. You may feel like a cactus, a waterfall, a science experiment, and a mystic—all before lunch. Stay anyway. Submerge yourself in meetings and fellowship. Borrow someone else's faith when yours is tired. Let your body heal, let your feelings speak, and let your spirit become curious. You do not have to understand the whole road today. You only have to stay long enough to see the lights come on.
